Abstract: It is important for a manager to know to delegate work. The manager must consider his employees experts in their job. They must be let to do their job without his interference. Also, the persons to which we delegate work must understand what their place is. More exactly, they must understand why work is delegated to them. They must understand how the selection process of the individuals available was done. The people chosen to do the tasks have to be told exact information. This information is how much time they have to do the job and what are the results expected. Also, delegating work allows the manager to focus on the more important things.
